

Leon Held —

Portfolio

My name is Leon Held and I'm a design youngster with fresh ideas and a naive approach to given concepts—always ready to find an innovative and slightly provocative design solution. Yet I'm trained as well in constructional and technical solutions with an emphasis on manufacturing specific design.

Böjt.

To bend or not to bend. Thanks to areas with trapeze-shaped strips on the inside, this plywood is easy to bend, yet impossible to crack—perfectly flat for shipping and storing.

Made from raw cotton, this lounge seating is specifically designed and manufactured for the exhibition use—less: slow fashion against lavishness and ugly clothing.

Intercultural communication is nowadays more important than ever before but often fails due to a language barrier. Therefore we created a meeting place that requires twenty-two kickers and one ball but gets along without bold words.

Inimi-table-football, never the less tells a story. Built by refugees it reminds us of the beauty that lies in diversity, manifested in hand-crafted inimitable figures from different kinds of wood. Metaphorically speaking, every player has its own flaws and scars. But for the moment, everyone is equal, standing side by side regardless of color and descent.

The Hanover-based initiative Unter einem Dach aims to train refugees in craftsmanship. In the context of a student project, we designed low-tech products to be manufactured by them.

From the exploitation of the ,natural' ressource of found plastic to mono-material ingots, trashure hunters aims to be an holistic, tracable and educational approach to plastic waste.
